Once upon a time there lived a married couple named- Nestor and Jessica. They had an orange cat. Once, in the winter season, the cat was lost. The couple could not find it anywhere, though they looked for it everywhere.

One day, they heard many soft meows from the roof of the house, while they were cooking nearby. They climbed onto the roof and found to their great joy that their cat had given birth to four-five lovely kittens. The roof had become the home of the cats.

The five kittens grew very fast. When they were big enough to crawl, Nestor and Jessica took one of them with them to their house. It was grey and had white paws. Nestor gave the other kittens away to their friends, but let Jessica keep the grey kitten.

One day, the couple decided to take the kitten to the meadow in front of their house, to play with it. Then Nestor and Jessica saw some strange-looking leaves and began to pick them, forgetting all about the kitten.

Suddenly, they heard some sounds...

Someone was shouting, "Come back, come back!" They saw a hunter riding a horse, and his two dogs were running ahead in the direction of the kitten. The dogs were getting close, and the kitten, instead of running away, stiffened and crouched, ready to face the dogs. It looked so tiny in front of the big dogs.

Jessica screamed, and Nestor ran to the kitten as fast as he could and fell on the kitten just as the dogs were about to pounce on it. Luckily, the hunter galloped up at that same moment and drove the dogs away.

The couple took the kitten home and they decided to never bring it out with them to the meadow.
